

What are your core values and beliefs?

As a web developer, my core values include continuous learning, user-centric design, and ethical coding. I prioritize quality, efficiency, and adaptability, driven by a passion for technology. In my daily work, my focus is on problem-solving, clean code, and creating positive user experiences.

What are your goals and aspirations?

My first goal is to be a responsible man. I'm practicing more to make me a senior web developer as soon as possible. My last goal is to create a special website for me.

What are the first steps you will take to build your personal brand?

As usual, my brand will be my profession. I'm a web developer and it will be my passion. So in my learning stage, if I share my learned topic and my little experience, people can know me as a brand. So I have to share on LinkedIn and like this site.

How does personal branding differ from self-promotion, and why is this distinction important?

I think when we share anywhere, I'm a web developer or software developer, etc. Then we promote ourselves and people just know who we are as we share ourselves. It's called self-promotion.

But when we share work and our learning topic. Then people can see directly our work, our learning process. Then people know us through our profession. It's called branding.

What are you most proud of?

First of all, I am grateful to Allah Ta'ala for giving me so much patience. I'm a slow learner. But when I start any mission, I don't stop until finish it. I think it is possible for my patience. So I'm proud of my patience.